An Open Letter

Mokena, July 3rd, 1933.

Editor News-Bulletin:

Almost immediately following the appointment for one year by our present Village Board of DeLue & Co., as Village Engineers and Howard Schlutz as Village Attorney, a proposal has been made that the subject of installing a system of sanitary sewers in Mokena be considered at this time.

In such proposal, mention was made of the possibility of the Village securing Federal aid by which to finance such construction, as I understand it, but no mention was made as to how the operation was to be paid for nor as to how the taxpayers would repay the Federal Government for any loans made us. Who in Mokena wants a sewer?

Our school as well as many homes have perfect sanitation with proper outlets. Cannot anyone who may wish such, secure AT THEIR OWN EXPENSE the same effect without making us all pay for it?

If rumors are correct, efforts have been made to have the Illinois State Board of Health order Mokena to install a sanitary (but very expensive) system of sewers. What influence, if any, is being used to compel us, now or in the near future, to supply these engineers and this attorney with profit from our pockets? Evidence as to the need of Mokena in respect to a sewer is in the records of the County Court of Will County and the record very clearly shows lack of progress in Mokena as well as lack of good reason for a costly sewer system in our village. Has there been any substantial progress made since this previous decision sufficient for the subject being taken up again?

Villages close to us have solved, at minor expense, their sewer and outlet problems. Cannot similar solutions be had here or must our local taxpayers be burdened with a high cost experience?

While I understand that a majority of our present board is opposed to any action at this time, it is well to understand that those interested only in securing our money, not caring whence it comes, will use every effort, apparently, to make us pay, now, or in the future.

As I see it, these engineers and this attorney ought not to be re-engaged. This sewer matter probably would not have been put before us again had they not been engaged for this year.

Mokena Men's Club Has 25th Birthday

The benefit dance given at the Mokena Men's Club pavilion by the Mokena Fire Department Tuesday night, drew a big crowd and all enjoyed the music furnished by the Wachter orchestra of Mokena. The proceeds will go toward paying for the new fire truck.

The dance was a sort of a double header as the Mokena Men's Club celebrated their 25th anniversary. This is the oldest organized club in the Mokena territory. The club was organized in 1908 and gave their first dance in the Cappel grove on 4th of July of that year. Many of the old timers who attended the Fourth of July dance this year, remembered the event of 25 years ago.

Hundreds Attend Tinley Parade

The parade headed by the Tinley Park Legion color guard and the Tinley Park Community Band followed by various groups and decorated floats marched down Oak Park avenue to Kirchen street, thence east on this street for three blocks then north half a block then west to the Linden Garden. Here the Community Band staged a real lively band concert.

At the close of the concert a dance was held in the Saenger hall. The Tinley Park Post of the American Legion sponsored the celebration. It is estimated that about $190 were cleared by the Post. The Post deeply appreciates the fine support given their undertaking.

Tinley Bakery Truck Hits Bridge; 2 Hurt

Henry Koehler, well known driver of the Tinley Park Bakery figured in a bad auto accident 4th of July evening a short distance east of Mokena on the gravel road when a new Chevrolet truck he was driving back to Tinley Park after parading thru Mokena with several other trucks of the bakery, struck the concrete railing of a culvert when the truck skidded on some loose gravel.

Mr. Koehler suffered bruises and cuts. With him was Nick Steinmetz of Orland. He was knocked unconscious when his head struck against the windshield. He was otherwise bruised and cut and his back was hurt. Both men were taken to the office of Dr. R. H. Carmichael by the members of the other bakery trucks following.

The truck was badly damaged and was towed to the English Bros. garage in Tinley Park.

The truck windshield was made of shatterproof glass which saved the men from more serious injury. The accident occurred about mid-night.

Marley 4th Program A Big Success

Former Bremen Twp. Resident Victim of Monoxide Gas

Mrs. Otto Cohrs, aged 40 years, well known former Bremen township resident, was found dead in an auto in the garage of the Cohrs home in Blue Island by her husband Thursday night. It is thought the garage door blew shut as the car was being started and that Mrs. Cohrs died of monoxide gas.

On account of the Coopers Grove church being redecored, the funeral services were held Monday afternoon in the Trinity Lutheran church, Bachelors Grove, Rev. Mr. Meyer of the Coopers Grove Lutheran church officiating.

MONEY GOES UP IN SMOKE AS HOME BURNS

Fire completely destroyed the 4 room house of the Yerian family in the southeast portion of the Elmore Subdivision south of Tinley Park. Fourth of July morning. The fire broke out about 11:30 a. m., and in a few minutes the dwelling was a mass of ruins with all its contents destroyed. The Tinley Park Fire Department responded but the flames had made too much headway.

It is understood that $80 in cash which Mr. Yerian had borrowed on a life insurance policy together with several hundred baby chicks were burned.

According to the story told Mrs. Yerian lit the oil cook stove and then joined her husband in the garden work. Suddenly she glanced up and saw the house on fire.

It is thought the breeze caused the oil stove to flare up and set fire to near by articles.

All the clothes and in fact every thing the Yerian family had was destroyed by fire. They carried no insurance and the loss is total.

The civic spirited citizens of Tinley got busy and soon had the family outfitted with clothes and also provided Mrs. Yerian with a railroad ticket and some money so she was able to take up a job in Chicago Wednesday. She had been promised the job a few days before the fire. The Yerian family has been staying with neighbors for the time being.

An automobile standing alongside the house caught fire but was dragged away and saved from the flames.

ILLINOIS
State News

A cash shortage of $174,190 in the accounts of the state finance department on January 31, 1933, when Garrett de F. Kinney of Peoria was director, was reported to the state auditor, J. J. Rice, Kinney's successor, had the audit made by the Chicago accounting firm of Ralph Turnbull and Company. He said it would be submitted to Governor Horner. The audit related that, besides the cash deficiency, $352,803 was on deposit from the department of finance in two closed banks on the same date.

The rare spectacle of a legislator announcing that he had been offered money to influence his vote was presented in the state senate. Senator James O. Monroe (Dem., Collinsville), a newspaper publisher, made the assertion. Twice in the four years he has served in the general assembly has he been offered cash for his vote, he said—once at the close of the 1931 session and again the day when he made the assertion. His declaration came when the Graham-Gunning bill to regulate the practice of dentistry in Illinois—and aimed specifically at corporate dentistry—was on third reading.

Radical changes in the state's method of contracting for cement road building, the chief one of which will be to permit contractors to supply their own cement instead of requiring them to use that supplied by the department of public works, were ordered by Governor Horner.

Families on the relief rolls in 62 downstate counties are raising 1,925,170 bushels of vegetables this summer, according to estimates made by J. C. Readey, director of subsistence gardens for the Illinois emergency relief commission.

Unless the general assembly at this session enacts legislation which will prevent the Cook county board of appeals from slashing tax assessments as was recently done, the local governments will be unable to borrow any money on tax anticipation warrants and will therefore be without any income for an indefinite period. Such legislation must be enacted before the general assembly adjourns or the financial troubles of the governments in Cook county will become indescribably worse. That is the gist of a report made by Joseph K. Brittain, chairman of Governor Emmerson's tax conference of 1931-32 and former president of the Chicago Real Estate board.

Peter J. Angsten, chairman, announced that the industrial commission of Illinois had appointed Dr. Philip H. Kreuscher as its medical director. Dr. Kreuscher is president of the Illinois State Medical society. "We wish to speed up an impartial administration of the workmen's compensation act," said Mr. Angsten. "To that end, we plan to organize a medical department composed of outstanding physicians, radiologists and neurologists. It is our belief that, with such a medical staff, we can cut the contested cases by 20 per cent, give quick relief to injured men and save both workers and employers large sums now being expended in legal fees."

Andrew Russell, former state auditor and state treasurer, was named in a federal indictment in Springfield, along with Millard F. Dunlap, former treasurer of the Democratic national committee, and William G. Goebel, former treasurer of the Illinois college of Jacksonville. The three are charged with misapplication of funds of the Ayers National bank, of which they were officials and which was closed last fall. Dunlap and Goebel had just been acquitted by a jury in Jacksonville of larceny and embezzlement in connection with the Ayres bank.

STATE BREVITIES

William R. Jewell of Danville, sixty-four, attorney and astronomer, died after an illness of three months. He was counsel for the American Astronomical society.

The First National bank of Joliet opened for business, the city's first bank to do so since the moratorium. The new bank made available to old depositors 40 per cent of their accounts.

David Samples, fifty, a farmer near Lincoln, was struck and fatally injured by an Illinois terminal system passenger train while walking on the tracks.

Matthew Crichton, seventy-two, fired a blank from a revolver into his right jaw. The wadding tore a large hole, cut an artery and Crichton bled to death.

C. E. White, sixty-five, who served as sheriff of Jackson county during the stirring days of the southern Illinois Klan warfare died in Murphysboro.

Arthur Kendall Stearns, sixty years old, founder and former publisher of the Waukegan Sun, died at the Alice Home hospital in Lake Forest.

Dixon's squad of 12 boys outscored a record field of contestants at the University of Illinois to win the all-around championship in the fourteenth annual judging contest for vocational agriculture students.

The postmaster general announced discontinuance of the post office at Duncan, Stark county, effective June 30. Future mail for that section should be addressed, he said, to Princeville.

PETER NOTICES A FUNNY SMELL

WHENEVER Short-Tail the Shrew was near him, Peter Rabbit would keep sniffing and sniffing. From somewhere there was coming a funny smell that he didn't just exactly like. It reminded him something of the scent Jerry Muskrat carries with him and is so fond of, and which has given him his name of Muskrat. It was a musky smell. At first Peter didn't think that it might be coming from Short-Tail, but finally Short-Tail noticed the way in which Peter was sniffing.

"What are you sniffing for?" demanded Short-Tail.

"I was just trying to make out where that queer smell comes from," replied Peter.

Short-Tail stopped running about long enough to take two or three sniffs. "I don't smell anything queer," said he.

"I would almost think Jerry Muskrat had been here," said Peter sniffing harder than ever.

Short-Tail began to chuckle. "I know what it is," he said, "only I don't think there is anything queer about it. It is me you smell. To be exact, it is the scent I carry with me. I like it myself, but I've been pleased to note that there are many people who do not like it. The more that don't like it the better suited I am."

"Why," demanded Peter, "I should think that if you like it, yourself, you would want everybody else to like it, wouldn't you?"

"Perhaps you would and perhaps you wouldn't," retorted Short-Tail. "If you were in my place you would feel exactly as I do about it. All the members of my family like that scent. It makes finding each other an easy matter. But Reddy Fox and Red-Tail the Hawk and most of the others who hunt little folks like me don't like that scent. Just as soon as they smell it they go looking for someone else. About the only one who doesn't seem to mind it is Hooty the Owl. I hate that fellow. Yes, sir, I hate that fellow. If he only made some noise with his wings I wouldn't mind him so much because I've got as quick a pair of ears as anybody. But my eyes are not much use—"

"I shouldn't think they would be," interrupted Peter, for the first time noticing how very tiny Short-Tail's eyes were.

"They are plenty good enough for all my needs," sputtered Short-Tail rather hotly, for he is quick tempered. "If I can tell light from dark, that is about all I care. My nose and my ears tell me everything else I need to know. I couldn't get along with eyes any bigger than I've got. No, sir, never in the world. Big eyes would be a nuisance. Bah! Who wants big eyes?"

At this funny speech Peter blinked his own eyes very fast. It was a most surprising thing to hear anyone with such little pin-point eyes say that big eyes would be a nuisance. "Everybody to his own taste," retorted Peter. "For my part I don't see what objection you can have to big eyes. I should think you would want to see a little something."

"And get them full of sand every time I dig a tunnel? No, thank you! You may have big eyes if you want them, but for me the smaller the better," snapped Short-Tail. "Listen! I hear footsteps!" Short-Tail disappeared along one of his little paths!

A FEW SANDWICHES

THERE are so many hearty sandwiches that may be prepared from a few slices of cold meat with the addition of pepper, onion, catsup, or other seasonings, that one may have a variety without any trouble.

Pork Sandwich.

Mix chopped, cooked pork with chopped onion and green pepper for seasoning, moisten with salad dressing and use as filling on buttered bread. Take pork that has been cooked with boiled dinner, chop fine and add chopped sweet pickles, green peppers and a stalk or two of celery. Add mayonnaise to mix and use on any bread.

Chopped tongue with cucumber relish or chopped pickles, used on buttered whole wheat bread, is very good.

Corned Beef Sandwich.

Put a thick slice of corned beef between two slices of lightly buttered bread. Spread with a thin coating of made mustard and a lettuce leaf. Horseradish may be used in place of the mustard for variety. Another way is to chop the corned beef, add mus-

The Same Old Flag

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

SOME one's bought a new flag, to hang above the street, A red and white and blue flag, the marching men to greet, A tasseled, fringed and gold flag, a flag as pure as snow, And yet it is the old flag, the flag we used to know—

The same red, white and blue flag, The same old dare-and-do flag, The same old tried and true flag, The flag of long ago!

Some one's bought a bright flag, the old began to fade, A blue and red and white flag, to carry on parade, A red as red as flame flag, a blue as blue as skies, And yet it is the same flag, the fairest flag that flies—

The same blue, red and white flag, The same old dare-to-fight flag, The one and only right flag, The flag that never dies!

A tattered-to-a-thread flag, or flag however fair, It's the blue and white and red flag, the same flag anywhere, A cotton or a gold flag may hang above the door, And yet it is old flag, the flag our fathers bore—

The same red, white and blue flag, The same old dare-and-do flag, The same old tried and true flag, Our flag forevermore!

Norway Sandwich.

Boil two cupfuls of tomato, add a pound of chipped dried beef and half a pound of rich cheese which has been put through a meat chopper. Let come to the boiling point, add one beaten egg and cook to the spreading consistency. Add cayenne and spread on buttered bread. This will keep in the ice chest for a few days.

Dried Beef and Pickle Sandwich.

Put one-fourth of a pound of dried beef and three or four sweet pickles through the food chopper, add mayonnaise and spread on buttered bread. This tastes like ham sandwich.

Try beef, cheese and celery for a mixture; moisten with salad dressing.

GRAPHIC GOLF

SPARED SHOTS

Favoring one club is often apt to create a condition that will spread to other shots. It is no less a fault than pressing, although it is considerably less heard of. Oftentimes this hitting well within ourselves becomes so chronic that it is hard to overcome. Generally the best cure is to underclub for a while in order to counteract the tendency, a curative method, favored by Francis Ouimet. For instance play a hard shot with a mashie instead of resorting to a No. 3 or 4 iron. These two extremes will thus evolve after a time into a suitable medium shot. Once this is achieved the shot can be hit firmly toward the pin. The greens today generally will hold a firm iron and the feeling that one can thus play boldly for the pin adds confidence to one's game.

HER TWENTY-FOUR HOURS OF GLORY

Parisian "Lady of the Tub" Queen for a Day.

"In the gay nineties," says a bulletin of the National Geographic society, "the washerwomen or blanchisseuses in each quarter of the city of Paris elected a queen from among themselves, and the queens in their turn elected a 'Queen of Queens.' This honored lady of the tub was borne on a throne to the president of the republic, who bestowed upon her a golden bracelet. Among other presents she received $100 in gold, a dress which might serve for her wedding gown, and a crown which might later be pawned or used as a parlor decoration, depending upon the vicissitudes of the queen's later years.

"Recent celebrations have been merely processions of floats, grotesque or lovely according to the moods of their designers. The queens of queens have been beautiful—and with no background of suds. The president now presents them with wrist watches.

"Mi-Careme's queen for the day is selected from the 20 queens who represent the 20 arrondissements of Paris. In addition to these queens there are many more, including queens of students, hucksters, dressmakers, and typists.

"The number of queens has grown so great that it is now impossible for each to have a separate automobile for herself, and others for her attendants; so each queen has her car filled with her ladies in waiting. The automobiles of the queens are followed by floats which often caricature current events. There may be, for example, the ogre of high prices, the housing problem, and the culture-faced landlord.

"The route of the procession is equivalent to a sight-seeing tour of Paris. It passes through the most interesting sections of the city: the Latin quarter, the Place de la Concorde, the Madeleine, the Opera, and Port Saint Denis. The procession stops at two places, the Elysee palace, where the president kisses the hand of the queen of queens and bestows a wrist watch upon her, and the Hotel de Ville where the city fathers' place her on a dais which is occasionally used for the entertainment of a visiting sovereign.

"Mid-lent Thursday is the only day except the French national holiday on July 14 when the Paris boulevards are closed to vehicular traffic and turned over to the crowds of pedestrians struggling to get close to the festival cars.

"Celebrations for Mi-Careme are now held in Corsica, Italy, and Spain. Nice and Cannes on the French Riviera, stand out, however, as the cities where the holiday spirit of the occasion is enjoyed with pre-eminence and where the populace is not just a crowd of observers but active participants in the fun."

Dead Man Their Host

Five members of the Royal Burnham Yacht club dined together in a London restaurant. The host was not present, except in spirit. He has been in his grave five years. The giver of the dinner was an enthusiastic yachtsman, and the guests were friends and fellow members of the Royal Burnham. In his will he left funds with instructions that the income was to provide a dinner every year for eight friends whom he nominated to celebrate his birthday. One of these has died, another is in Australia and the third was too ill to attend.

Modern Housing for Hens at Century of Progress

MODERN housing, as displayed at A Century of Progress, the great exposition in Chicago, is not for humans alone. The latest styles for residences for chickens also are shown, and as may be seen in our photograph, they are nothing like the old unsightly coops. Inhabiting the new houses at the fair are a lot of wonderful prize chickens of all breeds.

The Present Statuary Hall

Alexander H. Stephens—Georgia

Senator Robert M. La Follette—Wisconsin

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

THE recent announcement from Washington, that some of the statues in Statuary hall on the "main line" between the house and senate chambers in the United States Capitol are to be removed because engineers believe that the weight of the 68 bronze and stone figures which now crowd the hall is endangering the foundations of the chamber, has brought again into the limelight an institution which is regarded as our "national hall of fame."

Plans are under way to place many of the statues in the long corridor on the ground floor that runs the entire length of the Capitol building. Instead of being crowded together in a single chamber, these statues henceforth will be widely distributed.

This action has also revived talk of providing a national pantheon, a building where there would be ample room for the proper display of every statue, such as was provided for by a bill which was introduced into congress in recent years by Representative George H. Tinkham of Massachusetts, but which was referred to a committee and seems to have become lost in the legislative shuffle.

Statuary hall is the original chamber of the national house of representatives. In 1864 Representative Merrill of Vermont introduced a resolution to have the old house chamber set aside for this purpose. Each state was authorized to place there two statues of men and women who had been "illustrious for their historic renown" and had rendered distinguished civil or military service to the country.

Recent additions include statues of John M. Clayton and Caesar Rodney from Delaware, Hannibal Hamlin from Maine, Alexander H. Stephens from Georgia, John C. Greenway from Arizona, Robert M. La Follette from Wisconsin and Sequoyah from Oklahoma.

The list of states and the men who have honored their notables follow:

Lesson for July 9

CALEB

LESSON TEXT—Joshua 14:6-14.
GOLDEN TEXT—Blessed is that man that maketh the Lord his trust, and respecteth not the proud, nor such as turn aside to lies. Psalm 40:4.

PRIMARY TOPIC—A Truthful Soldier.

JUNIOR TOPIC—A Fearless Soldier Rewarded.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Caleb the Courageous.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Caleb's Confidence in God.

Caleb stands out in Bible history as a strong personality. He was a man of such character as deserves special study.

1. Elements of Caleb's Character.

1. Independence of spirit (Num. 13:30). Though the multitude clamored to follow the report of the ten, Caleb determined to stand alone. This is a highly important element in human character. One should stand for what he knows to be right regardless of the sentiment of the crowd.

2. Loyal to convictions (Josh. 14:6; cf. Num. 14:6-9). What Caleb knew and felt he spoke out. He did not wait for the opinion of others and then shape his own to suit that of the crowd. The man who can be trusted is the one who is loyal to his convictions. Joseph was an earlier, and Daniel a later example of the loyalty to conviction exhibited by Caleb.

3. Unselfish (Josh. 14:12). He did not wish to thrust some one else into the place of difficulty. He desired to go into the place where it would require fighting in order to drive out the giants which were in the land.

4. Courageous (Josh. 14:12; cf. Num. 13:30). This courage he displayed when he insisted that they were able to go up from Kadesh-Barnea and take possession of the land. Forty-five years have elapsed since that time (Josh. 14:10). Though he would be now considered an old man, he still desired that place for an inheritance which would require fighting to possess. He said, "I am as strong this day as I was in the day that Moses sent me; as my strength was then, even so is my strength now for war."

5. Loyal to God (Josh. 14:8; cf. Num. 14:24). He served God with a wholehearted devotion. A man who is thoroughly loyal to God is always true and magnanimous in his dealings with his fellows.

II. Caleb Laying Claim to His Inheritance (Josh. 14:6-12).

Caleb was accompanied by the children of Judah. He did not come alone to present his claim, lest he be suspected of taking advantage. Then, too, he did not wish to wait until after the lot was cast for God had already given a certain portion to him (Num. 14:30). The basis of his claim was:

1. The ground of his service (vv. 6-8). He had endangered his life in spying out the land—had gone to Hebron when the giants were there. He brought back a true report even when his brethren were all against him. He bore his testimony and insisted that they go up and take the land even though to do so incurred the displeasure of his brethren, making it necessary for him to stand alone.

2. On the ground of the oath of Moses to him (v. 9). Joshua had respect for Moses, and was bound to follow the counsels of his faithful master whom he succeeded.

3. On the ground of God's providential dealing with him (vv. 10-12). God had preserved him in bodily health. His natural forces were unabated, though he was now eighty-five years old. He still regarded himself as capable of driving out the giants who possessed the land. The preservation of one's health is an indication of God's will that there is still work to do.

III. Joshua Giving the Inheritance to Caleb (Josh. 14:13, 14).

1. Caleb blessed by Joshua (v. 13). He not only acquiesced in Caleb's claim, but bestowed the blessing of God upon him in it.

2. The inheritance given (vv. 13, 14). Hebron, which means fellowship, was the name of the inheritance. Only those who fully follow the Lord can enjoy fellowship with him. Though Caleb now legally possessed Hebron, it was necessary for him to fight to drive out the giants who infested it. In the Lord Jesus Christ we have an inheritance which God has given us. We, too, must fight because the enemy is unwilling to relinquish the claim upon it. Caleb got what he asked for because it was in keeping with the will of God. We, too, are sure to get that which we claim when we lay hold on that which is according to God's Word.

WRITER TELLS OF ART IN COIFFURES

Hair Structures "Fearful and Wonderful."

It's interesting to note in Stefan Zweig's "Marie Antoinette" how the coiffeurs of the day reflected the activities of the woman of the period, just as do our own, Antoinette Donnelly comments, in the Chicago Tribune.

Zweig tells how the coiffures of the ill-fated queen's era were built.

"The second great task of the queen's hair," we read, "In superb style a great artist, one Monsieur Leonard, drove a six-in-hand every morning from Paris to Versailles to practice his craft on the queen with comb, washes, and towels, inventing new devices from day to day.

"Just as Mansard, the famous architect, surmounted the houses built by him with the artificial roof which goes by his name, so did Monsieur Leonard construct above the forehead of every lady of rank a towering edifice of hair decked with symbolic ornamentations."

The hairdressing operation itself is described by Zweig:

"To begin with, by means of huge hairpins and a lavish expenditure of stiff pomade the hair was strained upward from the temples like a huge, flaming candle, about twice the height of the pointed head dress of a Prussian grenadier; then, in the free space, 18 inches above the eyebrows begin the artist's plastic panoramas, with fruit, gardens, homes, panoramas, with fruit, gardens, houses, ships, the sea in a storm, the whole motley world modeled with the comb on the summit of the 'pout,' but the event of the day had to be symbolized in this superstructure."

GET YOUR IODINE

ALL the iodine you need in your diet each day, according to the best information which scientists have been able to obtain, is a minimum of 0.05 of a milligram. That doesn't sound like much, but it makes a lot of difference whether you get your quota or not. If you don't, you may be afflicted with that disfiguring swelling of the neck known as goiter, and if you get very little indeed over a long enough period, even graver illnesses may attack you. The birth of many dwarfed and feeble-minded children has been definitely traced to a deficiency of iodine in the diet of their parents.

There is plenty of danger, too, of such a deficiency. When this world was young some compounds of iodine were probably distributed quite uniformly throughout its mass. But they have been and are being gradually washed away into the sea, and in some districts, known as the "goiter belts," little or none remains.

How to Get It

Various plans have been used to supply iodine to these people who live in such places. One is the use of iodized salt, another the periodic administration of pills containing iodine in the schools. A third device is to add iodine to the water supply of cities, but none of these methods have proved wholly satisfactory. Any one of them may be interrupted by the individual, or the community, and the daily need for iodine never stops.

The best way to get it is through proper selection of the food you eat. People living where goiter is prevalent can best protect themselves and their families by eating plenty of sea food, particularly oysters and shrimps, and by regular daily consumption of vegetables and milk from goiter-free regions.

Iodine Rich Recipes

Fortunately, such vegetables and fish are available to everyone in canned form. The eating of fish from the sea once a week, at least, has medical as well as religious teaching in its favor. And it is important to remember that neither vegetables nor sea food suffer any loss of iodine in canning.

As sea food is so important in order to secure your full quota of iodine, we are giving here a couple of recipes for sea foods rich in iodine.

Salmon Bechamel: Flake the salmon from one tall can, and put in individual buttered baking dishes. Sprinkle with salt, pepper and a few grains of nutmeg. Make Bechamel sauce by melting two tablespoons butter, sautéing one half a small onion, chopped, in it, and then adding two tablespoons flour. Add slowly three-fourths cup white stock, or one chicken bouillon cube, and three-fourths cup cream, or evaporated milk, stirring until smooth and thick. Season to taste with salt and pepper, pour over fish and cover with buttered crumbs. Brown in oven. Serves six.

Mackerel Maitre d'Hotel: Open one large oval one-pound can of mackerel, and remove contents carefully without breaking to the shallow, greased baking dish from which it is to be served. Sprinkle with salt and pepper and minced parsley, and heat in oven or under broiler. Make Maitre d'Hotel butter by thoroughly creaming one-third cup butter and one tablespoon chopped parsley, adding slowly one tablespoon lemon juice, and seasoning to taste with salt and pepper. Just before serving the fish, spread this butter over the top. Serves six.

Sunshine Club

The girls 4-H Sunshine Club held their last meeting at the home of Miss Nellie Steinborn. All of the girls have completed their work and are ready for the County Contest day which is to be held July 19th. There will be a demonstration team, a clothing judging team, girls entering the style show and the health contest.

This club wishes to thank Mr. M. E. Tascher, our County Club leader for the interest he has shown in our club. The girls also wish to thank our local leader, Mrs. Emil Kampe who organized and named our club, for her great help, her clever ideas and her great aim in bringing it to a success.

Our work is completed for the year, and we will now find time to practice our play which, we are planning to give this fall. And speaking of trips, why Mr. Tascher promised to give a wienie roast some where in the woods and he is going to furnish all the wienies.

Our leader, Mrs. Emil Kampe has asked all her club girls to go to the beach with her July 9th at Joliet and spend the afternoon in swimming and bathing. Let us hope the water is warm and bring all your friends and neighbors and also your baskets of lunch.

After the meeting lunch was served. The girls and Mrs. Kampe all went home happy.

Dictatorship

Claudius E. Wade, Director, Chicago College of Commerce

We have heard of it, read about it, discussed it pro and con, accepted it, rejected it, and finally for better or worse, we have it, "a one-man control" of the greatest economic structure that has ever been set in motion.

Shall we call it Communism or Facism, or just wait for time and succeeding events to decree a proper designation? However, since the birth of Soviet Russia, the National Industrial Recovery Act represents the most pronounced departure from a staid economic organization that the world has known. We cannot say that it is good or bad; in fact, we believe that it is beyond the ability of the wisest to forecast the outcome.

The major objective of the Act is to put the millions of unemployed back to work at a fair or living wage which means a considerable advance over the present scale, and to put all industry on an ethical basis regarding their competitive endeavor.

According to the provisions of the Act, the cost of production is to be considerably increased, of which wages will contribute the principal part. Ever since we have had machines, business has responded to the demand for increased wages by discharging men and giving their jobs to machines, and we know no reason why they will not do the same thing again. Perhaps a Dictator will help.

Food Excesses Cause Most Vacation Ills

Neither accidents on land, water or air, overexertion, nor severe sunburn, is the cause of the most illness during vacation time, is the surprising information appearing in a recent issue of Hygeia, the magazine issued by the American Medical Association. On the contrary, the most ordinary, everyday activity of life—eating—is the cause of the most illness.

"Fully 80 per cent of the patients treated by country doctors during the vacation period have simple cases of gastric upset caused by food excesses and food foolishness," says the author of this article.

Blame for this is assigned to the fact that, into their brief precious vacations people try to squeeze the greatest possible amount of pleasure—like eating all their favorite dinners on one night.

The article warns against leaving common sense behind when on a holiday, urging that vacationists remember to have nutritious meals, eaten at regular periods, during the holiday period as at any other time. Nutritious meals are generally recognized as being those built around the protective foods, fresh milk, fruits and vegetables.

LOCAL VETERANS APPROVE NINE POINT PROGRAM

Members of William Martin Post No. 725, Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States unanimously endorse the legislative program of the national organization as outlined by L. S. Ray, Vice-Chairman of the National Legislative Committee of the V. F. W., Washington, D. C. The members of Post No. 725 are vigorously opposed to the principles invoked by the federal government in the adoption of the so called Economy Act. They repudiate the theory that disabled veterans must be deprived of compensation benefits as a means of balancing the federal budget. The objectives of the V.F.W. legislative program which constitute an ultimatum to Congress and the administration are as follows:

Restoration of former compensation benefits for all service-connected disabled veterans.

Reinstatement of the former scale of disability allowance pensions for non-service connected disabilities.

Restoration of presumptive clauses recognizing service origin for certain types of disabilities, including pulmonary and nervous diseases.

Equal compensation and pension benefits for all veterans of all wars with like disabilities and handicaps.

Restoration of former pension awards to widows and orphans of World War veterans who died of recognized service connected disabilities. Adequate pensions on an equal basis for widows and orphans of all veterans of all wars.

Hospitalization treatment for all disabled veterans on a basis that will permit full use of government hospital facilities already in existence.

Domiciliary care and treatment for disabled veterans of all wars at National Soldiers Homes under regulations in force before March 29, 1933.

Immediate cash payment of adjusted service certificates.

An appeal is again made to all veterans who have seen service on foreign soil or in hostile waters to join up with some V. F. W. organization.

Summer Time Is "Reducing Time"

Lecturing before women's groups in the Chicago area, Miss Eleanor Rhoads, nutritionist of the Milk Foundation, Incorporated, is reminding women that "summertime is reducing time" because in the summer the appetite is naturally less and the foods that are desired are the cooling, "reducing" ones such as fresh milk, fruits and vegetables which are conveniently low in calories or heat-producing elements.

A point Miss Rhoads is stressing is the necessity for maintaining a balanced diet when reducing just as at any other time. She lists these foods as the indispensables in the daily reducing diet: One quart of milk for calcium, vitamin A and protein; six servings of vegetables and fruits for vitamins and minerals; one serving of lean meat for protein; one serving of eggs for protein, vitamin A and iron; and not less than one-half ounce of butter, for vitamin A.

Another suggestion made by Miss Rhoads is that now with the longer days it is easier for busy women to find time to do their exercises, which need not be exhausting ones, as latest information indicates that they can well be built around stretching movements.

TELEPHONE COMPANY AVERTS NEAR CRISIS AT HARVARD

Harvard undergraduates have had a narrow escape.

Not long ago the New England Telephone and Telegraph Company thought it would be a good idea to honor Dr. Charles W. Eliot, who served for so many years as President of Harvard University, by naming the new dial telephone exchange, to be installed in Cambridge, "Eliot." The idea appealed to the undergraduates until it was realized that to dial the exchange, one would have to dial the letters E-L-I.

Shades of Eli Yale! Such an indignity could never be permitted. Consequently, the Harvard authorities with whom the decision rested turned down the suggestion of the telephone company that the new exchange should be called "Eliot," and instead adopted their alternative that the exchange should be designated "Kirkland." This isn't so bad, because Kirkland is likewise the name of a former Harvard president, although not so recent a one as Dr. Eliot. The exchange, therefore, is to be named after John T. Kirkland, who was President of Harvard from 1810 to 1823.

Facts About the Telephone

Of the 700,000 holders of stock of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, more than half are women.

An average of about 750,000 telephone calls is made each day in Washington, D. C. About 40,000 of these calls are to points outside the District of Columbia.

All countries in the world having more than 100,000 telephones, except China, Japan, New Zealand, and Russia, can be reached by telephone from any part of the United States.

HOLD ON TO YOUTH

Hand Poise

By Marie H. Callahan, Editor
Modern Beauty Shop Magazine

Those great numbers of us who are not professional beauties feel we have done pretty well if in the rush and hurry of our busy lives we manage to keep our hair, face and figure attractive, but if we were to study the famous actresses of the day we would soon observe what a large part hands have to play in creating a completely attractive woman—not only the beauty of the hands themselves but the way they are used. "If I just have something to do with my hands I'll be all right," is a frequent plaint of amateur actresses. And how few of us have mastered the art of "hand poise."

Of course it stands to reason that you cannot be at ease about your hands if you are conscious of their being red and chapped or in need of an expert manicurist. In this day and age when most women are actively engaged either in housework or in the business of earning a living, hands come in for a lot of use—and a lot of observation from the male sex too, incidentally. In the case of the housewife, dishwater is the chief enemy of hand beauty, while with the business woman, exposure to all kinds of weather with the resultant chapping and roughening of the skin is the biggest stumbling block to hand beauty.

It is a good idea to establish the habit of using rubber gloves when doing any sort of wet work. Frequent application of a skin lotion made of equal parts of glycerin and rose water is helpful.

Careless manicuring, however, is perhaps the worst sin we can commit against our hands. Just at present good taste does not put a taboo on vivid tinting of finger nails, but carelessly applied nail polish is still just as unattractive as ever, and grotesquely long nails give a claw-like appearance to the hand.

One frequent manicuring error is attempting to push the cuticle down before the skin is thoroughly softened by soaking in warm, soapy water. Only after this soaking, should the cuticle be gently pushed down with an orangewood stick, wrapped in cotton soaked in a cuticle removing fluid. Of course the nails should never be cut but always filed from sides to center.

Fragile or ribbed nails are especially difficult to keep neat. This condition is usually caused by lack of lime in the body and will have to be corrected through your diet. Drinking milk is of course the easiest way to get this necessary lime. A quart a day gives you all you need.

Hard skin at the outer corners of the nails is apt to develop in your hands, particularly when manicuring has been unskillfully done. Soaking the fingers in olive oil every day will help remedy this condition. Those little white marks often caused by knocking the nail accidentally can be eliminated by applying a paste made of equal parts of turpentine and myrrh.

Finally, secure in the assurance that your hands are as soft and beautiful as good care and careful manicuring can make them—forget them.

Five minutes later Reagan returned to the room. He spread out on the table the contents of Vernon's pockets: a handkerchief, a fountain pen, a notebook, several visiting cards, a fraternity pin, a bunch of keys, less than two dollars in silver, a packet of cigarettes and a box of matches.

Hanvey fumbled with the collection. "This all, John? Didn't he have a wallet?"

"Yeh," Reagan flushed. "It's in a special box in the warden's safe. Nothing in it but some money."

"How much?"

"Two hundred and ten dollars. I'll get it."

"Never mind," Jim was holding the bunch of keys in his hand. "Doesn't this look like a new key, John?"

Reagan nodded.

"Sure does."

"Bank box, I'll bet," observed Hanvey, as though talking to himself.

"Uh-huh, new bank box key. When's the next train for Steel City?"

Reagan consulted his watch. "Midnight."

"I wonder if you'd run up there to-morrow alone?"

"Sure I will. I can be back tomorrow evening. What's the big idea?"

Jim detached the key from the ring.

"Take this with you, John. I've got a hunch that Max Vernon rented a box at some big Steel City bank. Take some samples of his handwriting with you, because he'd use an assumed name, of course. You can check up on all boxes rented in the last couple of days—then compare the handwriting."

"And if I find the box shall I take a look inside?"

"No-o. We'll just take it for granted that if he rented a box there the Marland bank money is in it—or, anyway, Vernon's share. What say?"

Reagan rose. "I'm on my way, Chief." At the door he turned. "And if we do find that cash, Jim—and it turns out to be Vernon who had it—will you admit then that I was right?"

Jim smiled broadly. "Maybe," he said. "I'll sure think you were pretty near right, anyway."

CHAPTER XII

Warm brilliant sunshine bathed the courtyard when Tony Peyton and Larry Welch walked out on bond to temporary freedom. There was Ivy Welch, seeming a great deal older than she had four days previously, yet irrepressibly youthful withal; and a score of Larry's undergraduate friends, young men and women who had come down to congratulate the young couple on what every one considered the end of their jeopardy.

Ivy was particularly happy. "They wouldn't have let you out if they thought you were guilty, would they, Larry?"

He shook his head. "I don't believe so, Sis."

"Good!" She clasped her hands.

"All the time you were in there, Bud, I couldn't think of anything except—"

He squeezed her hand. "Don't you worry, Kidd. I didn't have anything to do with it."

Tony was with a group of her particular friends and Larry nodded toward her.

"Why don't you and she make up, Sis?"

Ivy's face grew stern. "I don't like her, Larry."

"Why?"

"Because she started all this. If she hadn't butted in on Pat and me; if she hadn't run to you; if she hadn't been such a fool as to go to Pat's room at the fraternity house. . . . Oh! can't you see, Larry, that I can't help believing Pat never would have been killed if she had minded her own business?"

"I'm sorry you feel that way, Sis. You know I'm crazy about her."

Ivy sighed. "I guess I'm just a crab, Bud. But if I feel that way—well, I can't help it, can I?" Then she reached out impulsively and pressed his fingers. "Maybe I'll get over it."

Several automobiles were waiting, and at the request of the president, Larry rode to the college with that dignitary and Dean Boyd. They discussed the case gravely and told Larry a great many things about Max Vernon which he had not known. They themselves did not know many details, but the campus was overflowing with rumor. Larry was doubtful.

"It doesn't seem possible that Max would do a thing like that."

"And it didn't seem possible that you or Miss Peyton would, either. We have been mighty worried."

"You've been darn white to me. I intend to resign—so the college won't suffer."

The two older men smiled.

"We're sorry for the scandal, of course, Larry. But we can't accept your resignation—for two reasons: One is that we believe you are innocent. The second is that it wouldn't help you particularly—if you ever came to trial—if we had acknowledged our lack of confidence by permitting you to leave the faculty."

Later that day Larry and Tony met by Old Main and walked toward Pine top . . . a knoll which rose above the surrounding country and from which one could look down upon the Marland campus, and thence still farther to the sprawling town of Marland. Half the student body saw them together and every young man and woman made a point of waving cordially, but no one joined them. The students were more than a little embarrassed. They wanted the pair to know that there was every belief in their innocence, every sympathy, every willingness to do whatever was necessary by way of help . . . but there was a natural hesitancy in intruding on their privacy. The tragedy had cast a sort of ghastly mantle about them.

They reached Pine top and stood regarding each other: the man tall and blond and very boyish-looking despite the tiny lines of worry about his eyes; the girl vividly beautiful. Their hands were clasped and they drank deep of the wine of freedom and of their joy at being with each other again. It was Tony who spoke.

"You know how I feel, Larry, about what you did."

He frowned. "What did I do?"

"Telling those detectives that Pat was alive when you left his room. Of course I know he wasn't."

Larry's cheeks blanched.

"How do you know?"

"I know now, Larry. That's all I wanted: To trick an admission from you. It was fine of you, dear. But we must go to Mr. Hanvey and tell him the truth. That Pat was already dead when you reached his room."

"But I didn't say—"

"Oh, yes you did, Larry. Just a second ago. Now listen to me: I don't know what you think about him—but I believe that terrible-looking Mr. Hanvey is one of the most wonderful men I have ever met. He can tell when we're telling the truth, and he knows when we're lying. I told him the truth, dear—even when it looked like I was tightening a noose around your neck. I was scared—and yet I wasn't scared. Everything I said seemed to increase your danger. Mr. Hanvey looked like he had gone to sleep. Then the next thing we knew we were released on bond. Mr. Hanvey knows a lot. And if he's going to help us, we must help him."

He nodded slowly. "I guess you're right." His face was very serious.

"It's kind of tough on Max Vernon, isn't it?"

"I'm sorry for that boy. Terribly sorry. And yet if killing is ever justified, it was then. We have no right, Larry, to keep the truth from a man like Mr. Hanvey, who is struggling to help us."

"We'll tell him."

They stood in silence for several minutes. Overhead a mocking bird trilled gayly; the pine trees swayed softly in the warm breeze which swept in from the countryside. The air was freighted with the fragrance of flowers and on Pine top there was no suggestion of anything but ineffable peace and happiness. It was so different from the solitary confinement at the Marland jail; so gloriously a relief from the staring at four blank walls and a tiny square of barred window. They were very young and very much in love with each other, and Larry moved so close to her that their bodies touched.

"When all this is over, Tony, you will marry me?"

She looked straight into his eyes.

"Yes, Larry."

"Did like to put into words . . . to be able to tell you how much I love you. . . ."

"You don't need to. I understand."

His arms closed about her and he held her close, staring hungrily into her eyes. Then, suddenly, he buried his face in her hair and so they stood for an age of time. . . .

All that afternoon the campus hummed with crazy rumor and wild conjecture. It was one thing to read in the newspapers of a murder and quite another to come in contact with one.

The tragedy had cast a pall over the campus; yet it had brought a new and strange excitement. Even commencement, which at this season of the year usually loomed up as being all-important, seemed a matter of little moment. Examinations held terrors for very few of the students. It was as though they had been confronted by some of the starkness of life a month ahead of time. Human life, human love . . . examinations and bachelors' degrees seemed of small moment by comparison.

The afternoon dragged away. Larry worked over his class books, trying to rid himself of the effects of the experience and wondering what the future had in store for Tony, for himself, and for Max Vernon. And in his room at the hotel, Jim Hanvey sprawled on the bed and devoured a detective story.

It was there that John Reagan found him. Jim put the book aside reluctantly.

"Gosh," he commented, "it's great—that story. Just as soon as I got interested in something like this, you have to come butting in. What is it?"

Reagan spoke crisply. "On the morning of May second a man answering Max Vernon's description—and there ain't any doubt, Jim, that it was Vernon—entered the American National bank of Steel City and rented a box. He gave the name of William T. Aragon. He took the box with him into a little booth. Then he left the bank. The box is number two thirty-five, and unless I'm all wrong you'll find a lot of Brother Fiske's lost money right there."

"Good work, John. You didn't look in the box?"

"No. You said not to. But I left word that no one was to be allowed in there, even with a written order from Aragon. That's fixed good and tight. And so—"

The telephone buzzed and Hanvey answered.

"This is the warden at the jail," announced the voice at the other end.

"Miss Peyton and Mr. Welch are down here. They want to see you as soon as possible."

"Send 'em over to the hotel, will you?" Then he turned away from the telephone and grinned boyishly at his friend.

"Welch and Miss Peyton are on their way over, John. Stick around if you want. I have a hunch we're going to hear some interesting dope."

Tony Peyton acted as spokesman.

"Larry and I have been talking pretty seriously, Mr. Hanvey. We've decided that you're playing square and are entitled to have the whole truth—so far as we know it."

Jim's big face beamed. "That's fine, Miss Peyton. But I want to ask one thing before we start: Am I going to get the whole truth or only part of it?"

"The whole thing."

"Great! Suppose you begin."

She shook her head. "I haven't a thing to add to what I told you at the jail. That was the plain, unvarnished truth. I think you know the truth by instinct. That's why I told it to you in the first place."

"It's a pity your boy friend didn't get the same hunch. We'd maybe have let him out earlier."

"I was a fool, I suppose," broke in Larry. "But I knew I was innocent and thought you'd never be able to convict me. So I wasn't very much of a hero, after all. And I was a trifle frightened."

"By what?"

"By the thing you've know all the time: that Pat Thayer was dead when I went to his room. Knowing that Miss Peyton had been there and that she was desperate—and seeing Thayer dead—I had every reason to be afraid. Suppose I had said Thayer was dead when I was there and you had believed me? And then suppose it turned out that Vernon had never visited the room? Can't you see that it would have checked it back to Miss Peyton beyond any argument?"

"Yeh. . . . That's right, sure enough. I'm mighty much obliged, Son, for clearing all these things up in my mind. And now suppose you tell me about that visit?"

"There isn't much to tell. I was rather appalled by the depth of Ivy's infatuation for Thayer. I was in a peculiar position, in that I had promised Miss Peyton I wouldn't tell anyone about her marriage to Thayer. I figured that by that time—two o'clock—she had plenty of chance to see Pat and I felt it was up to me, as Ivy's brother, to warn him off."

"What did you have in mind when you went to Thayer's room?"

The young man hesitated. "I'm trying to be honest, Mr. Hanvey, and the fairest way to answer that question is to say I don't know. But it's only honest to say that I intended to make it mighty clear to Thayer that he'd better keep away from Ivy."

"I see. . . . And when you got there?"

"He was dead. I got rather sick, just looking at the body."

"Did you touch him?"

"Good G—d! No!"

"How long were you in the room?"

"I don't know. Maybe two minutes, maybe ten. I can't remember."

"Why didn't you report finding the body?"

"Because I thought of Miss Peyton."

Hanvey nodded approval. "Pretty straight story, Welch. There are just one or two more questions. First of all, did you touch the knife?"

Larry's face expressed surprise.

"What knife?"

"The knife Thayer had been killed with."

"I didn't see any knife."

"I see. . . . Jim extracted a black cigar from his vest pocket, snapped the end from it and lighted the thing with a brief nod of apology to Tony.

"You took that diamond ring off Thayer's finger, didn't you?"

Again that startled light flashed in Larry's blue eyes.

"I told you I didn't touch the body at all."

OUR CHILDREN

By ANGELO PATRI

THE UNTRUTHFUL ONES

LITTLE children have some difficulty in keeping fact and fantasy apart. To them they are very close. They look about alike to the eyes of childhood because those eyes have not functioned in the world of reality. It is not hard to know that sort of untruth and to set it right. The difficult sort is that which appears or rather continues to appear on through adolescence.

When an adolescent tells you any kind of a story to head you in a direction that renders him safe, when he lies to you in cold deliberation, you have the right to fear for his condition. He needs immediate attention.

Many times these adolescent children are in the grip of sex urges that they know nothing about. The little instruction they have received is not enough to carry them through the terrific onrush of feeling, sensation, whatever you choose to term it, that besets them. In their endeavor to maintain themselves in any degree of comfort they make mistakes, then lie out of them as best they can because they are afraid to tell the truth. There is no use in telling them to tell you the truth and you won't blame them. They are ashamed, afraid, inarticulate.

When you find yourself in such a fix as this, waste no time. Go to the specialist. Find the one who knows adolescent children. Try to find a specialist who is serving in a hospital or clinic where such young people are treated. Tell him or her the story and put your afflicted child under treatment. Lies are indications of a pathological condition. All the scolding in the world won't help them. You need the skilled psychiatrist, neurologist, physician.

Sometimes fear drives children into telling lies. That sort of lie is as easily detected as the other. Try to find what sort of fear is troubling the child and do your best to remove it. If you cannot find the fear and you see that the child is suffering from it, take him to the specialist and have him treated for it. There is no time to be lost when adolescent children suffer from such ills. Sympathy is all very well but what is needed is skilled and prompt treatment.

Little children are easily handled as a usual thing. Even among them we find the psychopathic liar. You will know him if he comes your way. His stories are not imaginative fairy tales, not the defense gesture of helpless childhood, but the tales of fear, distress, oppression and outrageous prowess. Take that child to the doctor.

There is no cause for alarm when a little child strays from facts. Set him right by saying: That is the fairy story. Tell me the real one. But when untruthfulness continues on into adolescence, call the specialist.

HAVE AN APPLE

"I'M NOT coming to-morrow."

I added up the last column with great deliberation. I could see Don in the mirror on the edge of my desk but he couldn't see my face. That is fair enough because he has many other advantages, among them the recklessness of youth.

"So?" said I, leaving my columns with seeming reluctance. "Have an apple."

Don looked at me suspiciously but I continued to smile at the basket of apples.

I turned again to the columns and Don turned to the basket, took a tempting ruddy apple and bit into it. Now a boy with a mouthful of juicy apple simply can't scowl. It can't be done. So he crunched contentedly enough and I ran my pencil up and down, down and up, until the last bell rang.

"There. Give me your card. No need to bother your father with it every night. Come in and get it in the morning. It will be here on my desk signed and ready."

"All right. Good afternoon."

"Good afternoon, Don. Take another apple. That's right. Fill up your pockets with them."

Don is a man in size and a child in everything else. He wants to be like the other fellows but he is thirteen and the fellows his size are eighteen. He has been put out of a couple of schools and he has to stay in this one because there is no other. He can do some work well enough but certain other work like spelling, writing a paragraph from dictation, making a neat mechanical drawing are out. Somehow, some way we must manage to hold him and teach him at the same time. It was plain he had come down to the office in a tearing rage. Lucky I had the apples.

Apples are fine for boys anyway. They fill in the empty places that send up such queer feelings along about three-thirty. They are good for a lad's teeth. Doctor Tom says they clean them nicely. Doctor Tom ought to know because he used to eat them in my office along about three o'clock. But that was when he wasn't a doctor, just a lopsided gangling thing who annoyed the teachers and his mother and me to desperation. 'Twas the apples that saved him. I'll tell Felice to send down some more. We had a good crop this year. I'm going to need them.

Wit and Humor

A Fowl Reply

Hayes looked thoughtful.

"Tell me," he said, "is a chicken big enough to eat when it is two weeks old?"

His friend laughed.

"Don't be absurd," he replied. "Of course it isn't."

Hayes gave him a friendly push.

"Then how does it live?" he asked.

"Tell me that."

A Fast Worker

Plutocrat (to young man asking for his daughter's hand)—And have you said anything about this to my daughter?

Would-be Suitor—Not yet, sir. You see, it was only last night that I heard you had a daughter.—London Opinion.

Real Effort

Farmer—Thought you said you had plowed the ten-acre field?

Plowman—No, I only said I was thinking about it.

Farmer—Oh, I see; you've merely turned it over in your mind.

Where I Got It

Actor—When I play "Othello" the whole pit is bathed in tears.

Explorer—That's nothing. My last wireless speech on my North pole trip was so realistic that most of the listeners are still in bed with colds.

ACCOMPLISHMENT

"Oh, no, I never talk scandal."

"Yes, my dear, but you are a good listener."

The Right Place

"I've come from the employment bureau, ma'am," said the girl. "They said you wanted a servant."

"But I do all the work myself," replied the lady of the house.

"Then the place will just suit me."

Over the Radio

"Pardon me, but doesn't madam need the piano tuned?"

"I'm afraid that's not ours you hear. You'd better call at the Broadcasting company!"—Humorist Magazine.

No Hope

"Have you said your prayers Dickie?"

"Yes, Mummie. I prayed for you and Daddie, but not for Uncle Reg, because I heard Daddie say he was past praying for!"

And Then Some!

"Think o' poor old 'Arry bein' sent to jail! One o' the fastest working burglars in the game."

"Ah, well, he's takin' his time now."—Tit-Bit Magazine.

THREE AT A TIME

Unwed—I hear the stork has been making a trip to your house.

Dadmoor—A trip! Triplets.

On the Go

Mother—Helen is getting prettier, don't you think so?

Father—Really, my dear, I can't say. I must get up early some morning and meet her as she comes in.

If He Is Genuine

A genuine orator can go on long after he is through, and is welcomed to.

Will of Wheels

Freddie was giving his lady friend a long discourse on his family history.

"My Grandfather," he said, "was just a poor, hard-working London clockmaker. When he died, a few years ago, he left all his estate, which consisted of 200 clocks, to my father."

The girl smiled.

"How interesting!" she said. "It must have been real fun winding up his estate."—Philadelphia Inquirer.

Her Complaint

"I'm going straight down to the post office to make a complaint," said Freda pertly.

"Oh, darling," said her young man, "I'll do it for you. What is it you want?"

"I want to find out why they haven't delivered that box of chocolates you promised you were going to send me," she replied.—Answers Magazine.

THE BOOB

The Stout One—Yes, I spent the entire evening telling him that he had a terrible reputation for kissing girls against his will.

The Thin one—And what did he do?

The Stout One—He sat there like a boob and denied it.

Big Things Doing

Maid—The furniture man is here, ma'am.

Mistress—I'll see him in a minute. Tell him to take a chair.

Maid—I did, but he started with the piano.—Montreal Gazette.

the church and an interesting and

Best With Beer

BEER is here, but with its arrival has arisen the problem of what are the very best foods to serve with it.
Pretzels, of course. Everyone knows that. But not everyone knows that pretzels, crisp, nutty and delicious, can be obtained anywhere now in cans.

But pretzels are not the only canned foods, by a long shot, that go well with a "can of beer."
(Does that almost obsolete expression awaken old memories?) In fact, almost all of the foods that go best with beer can be bought in cans, and thus kept always on hand.

For a Party

A housewife can always be ready for one of those old-fashioned family parties, at which people drink a little beer and eat lots of food, if she'll keep on her reserve shelf some cans of frankfurters, sausage, sardines, sauerkraut, cheeses of all kinds and canned sandwich spreads.

Also canned crackers that will keep everlastingly crisp, pretzels, saltines, cheese crackers and cheese sticks.

Or if the party is to be a regular sit-down-and-eat affair, there are cans of beef à la mode, corned beef, ham—sliced, whole, deviled, or in loaf form—cans of tongue,
veal loaf, chicken—whole, boneless, deviled and in tamales—potted meats, pigs' feet and a lot more.

The great point now, according to the brewers, is not only to eat the right things with beer, but not to abuse the new privilege of drinking the beverage which makes these things taste so good.

TELEPHONE IS FASTER THAN A CAR—MUNCIE, Ind., Press

Robbers in Joliet, Ill., did not really fare so well as they had expected.
After the shouting and tumult had died, one of the three had been fatally wounded, a second had been seriously injured and captured and the third had escaped for the time-being. A policeman was shot in the arm but was not badly hurt. The captured robbers said they were from Gary, Ind.
The sad fate of the bandit crew was due to an efficient use of the telephone, it seems.

The bandits robbed a clothing store in Mendota, Ill., and escaped from the Mendota police after a fight, only to be forced to wage another battle with Aurora police as the car ran through or near that town, but again the robbers got away. When they reached Joliet they met their Waterloo.
Officers there were all "set" for them and opened fire without entering into negotiations. The robbers took 30 suits of clothing from the Mendota store, but where two of them are going these suits will not be in style. This bandit business is getting so it hardly pays the overhead.
